Royal Signals Association

The vital link between the serving and retired Royal Corps of Signals

Royal Signals Association

AIMS

To provide comfort and relief either generally or individually to past and present signallers and their dependants who are in conditions of need, hardship or distress.

To foster comradeship and morale within the Corps family, serving and retired.

WELFARE

Serving soldiers give generously to Corps Funds through the One Day's Pay Scheme. Many retired members of the Corps continue to donate generously after they have left the Service.

Each year hundreds of thousands of pounds of this money is channelled through the Association to serving or former Signallers and their dependants in need. The Corps family looks after its own.

COMRADESHIP

Keeps the Corps family in touch. Through RHQ and the Corps website you can trace lost friends, while Branches and Reunions provide meeting points.

Provides mutual support, networking and job finding opportunities.

Provides the chance to recruit new members to the Corps Family.

ANNUAL REUNION WEEKEND

The Corps Reunion for RSA members is held annually on the last full weekend of June at the home of The Royal Corps of Signals at Blandford.

Typically, over 900 members and guests usually attend this excellent event which includes displays by the White Helmets, the Free-Fall Parachute Team and the Corps Bands and Pipes and Drums.

RSA BRANCHES

The Association has evolved into the following sorts of branches to suit its members

There are 69 Local Branches spread throughout the UK that meet regularly during the year.

Affiliated Associations of which there are 27, are mainly based on defunct units and meet once or twice a year for reunions.

In the process of being established are Regimental Branches based initially on regular units serving in England.

Those members, who for whatever reason are unable to join a Local Branch, are administered centrally by RHQ.
